Dear Sir

As you gave me the hope of seeing you in my little cottage I write to say how delighted I should be if you would pay us an unceremonious visit on Wed^v evening when I have the hope of seeing D^r Rosen & two or three other [2] Germans – or people as verdeutsch as my English friends tell me I am – among them Sir Carlyle the author of the Life of Schiller & translator of Wilhelm Meister.

I propose this little visit only in the absence of any more ~~xxxxxxx~~ attractive – for you [3] know England too well to expect to find a man who has given himself wholly to abstract science, in a very brilliant position.

I should like extremely to accompany you in your visit to Miss Flaxman to whom I have a letter of introduction – This is a bold & frank proposal which you will of course be equally [4] frank in refusing if it would impose any gêne on your movements.

Tomorrow evening also I am at home & if you had nothing better to do should be delighted to introduce to you my young friend M^r John Mill of the E. India House son of the author of British India.

I am D^r Sir

most respectfully yours

Sarah Austin
